Coarse-grained: A few objects hold a lot of related data that's why services have broader scope in functionality. Example: A single "Account" object holds the customer name, address, account balance, opening date, last change date, etc. Thus: Increased design complexity, smaller number of calls to various operations Fine-grained: More objects each holding less data that's why services have more ... The name reflection is used to describe code which is able to inspect other code in the same system (or itself). For example, say you have an object of an unknown type in Java, and you would like to call a 'doSomething' method on it if one exists. The following is a listing of all undergraduate course codes.
